Leads on the Farm.

(By Jacob Wiehl.)

Read before the Watertown Farmers' Institute.

How the farmer deals and cares for machinery. Farming around stumps or stones year after year. Allowing manure to leach in yards all summer. Selling raw material, as hay, straw, corn or fodder. Keeping too much of our land under the plow and not keeping accounts are some of the important leads on the farm. I have seen farmers leave their machinery piled up in the fence corner from the time they got through with them until they wanted them again. It would not take any more time to draw them to your tool house or barn than it would to dig them out of the mud in the spring. All up to date farmers ought to have a place to keep them in the dry. I have heard men say that it cost more money to build tool houses than it would to buy new machines. Whenever you hear a man talk that way, please don't follow his example, as that would plow around stumps and stones for the sake of getting rid of hauling them off. It is a common practice among farmers to have an opening from the stalls from which the manure may be thrown to the outside. The pile is often made directly under the drip from the roof. The manure is allowed to leach away all winter, passing away into the branches and creeks. This is one of the greatest leads occurring on the farm.

Care of Manure—Some express a doubt whether sheds built to shelter manure have ever paid their cost. On the other hand sheds are recommended by many, but in order for a farmer to save the most of the fertility with the least work, it is necessary to let a certain amount accumulate in the stalls by using plenty of litter and hauling direct to the field. It is best to apply the entire manure to the soil in the freshest possible condition. How many farms have become unprofitable by selling their fertility in products and not returning the same to the soil?

The many purposes for which straw can be used make it a valuable article on the farm, and one deserving more attention than farmers see fit to give it. Where stock is kept in the stable a large amount can be used for bedding, which not only adds to the comfort of the animals, but aids in saving. To liquid manure, an item which the farmer who has the welfare of his soil at heart cannot overlook. It is also a source of pleasure, when one is comfortably seated before the evening fire to know that the horse or cow in its stall can be comfortable on its bed of straw.

If you hear the question asked, "Does farming pay?" you can safely answer, yes, when the right man is found in the right place. Those who fail will be found to be the wrong man in the right man's place. They would, as a general rule, fail in any other calling for which they were no more fitted than they were for the farm. In other words, it depends more upon the energy and intelligence of the man and his love for the work, than upon the kind of business which he follows.

I believe in small farms and thorough cultivation. I believe that soil loves to eat, as well as its owner, and ought, therefore, to be liberally fed. I believe in large crops which leave the land in better shape than they found it, making the farm and the farmer both glad at once. And that every farm should own a good farmer. That the best fertilizer for any soil is a spirit of industry, enterprise and intelligence. Without this, lime and gypsum, bones and green manure and guano will be of little use.
